Dear Mr. Davis:

The Committee on the Judiciary is conducting oversight of how and to what extent the Executive Branch has coerced and colluded with companies and other intermediaries to censor speech.¹ Certain entities, including pharmaceutical companies such as Merck, may have played a role in this censorship regime by determining what types of content constituted “misinformation”—sometimes at the behest of or with the encouragement of the federal government.² Whether directly or indirectly, a government-approved or -facilitated censorship regime poses a grave threat to the First Amendment and American civil liberties. Accordingly, as part of the Committee’s constitutional oversight obligations, we write to request relevant information and documents.

According to documents obtained by the Committee, personnel from Merck were invited in December 2020 to meet with personnel from other pharmaceutical companies, Executive Branch agencies, and Stanford University to discuss “a coalition to respond to COVID-19
